Reflections from the Maine State House

"The process made me proud to be a Mainer- even though I wasn't born here. The degree of dignity and respect for each other during debate is just very very impressive. Very moving."

-Raymond Anderson, Jefferson

Reflections from the Maine State House

"I came running down to the State House and I'm really glad I did because we ended up sitting in the gallery of the House listening to one of the most substantive and important debates of the year as the House talked about the Right to Die legislation that was before it. And we heard very strong arguments on both sides of the debate. We've been commenting amongst ourselves about how wonderful it was just to hear the civility and the depth and the richness of that debate. It isn't an easy question and it was really interesting to listen to it being explored by our representatives."
